An Intimate and
Dynamic CommunityTHOUGHTS FROM RABBI BERKOWITZ*In The Belly of the Whale

As rabbis all over the world start our preparations for the High Holy Days, we were all collectively amazed by the same news story:

On June 11th, Cape Cod lobster diver Michael Packard was swallowed whole, and then almost immediately spit back out, by a humpback whale. Packard sustained some soft-tissue injuries but no broken bones. But for brief moment, probably less than a minute, he thought that his life might be over.

What struck me, and my rabbinical colleagues, about this story is that there is actually a human being alive in our time that knows what the prophet Jonah experienced when he was in the belly of the whale.

Every Yom Kippur we read (or act out) the story of Jonah, the reluctant prophet who tried to flee from God's call. In an attempt to avoid sharing God's message with the wicked people of Nineveh, Jonah buys a ticket on a ship sailing in the opposite direction. Once aboard, a storm threatens to sink the boat. Jonah, knowing that the storm is a divine punishment meant only for him, tells the crew to throw him overboard.

While this action calms the stormy seas and saves the sailors' lives, Jonah's adventure is only beginning. A "big fish"—possibly a whale—swallows him whole, and he lives for three days in the darkness of its belly. This experience gives Jonah the opportunity to reflect on his actions and call out to God for help. When the fish ultimately spits him out on dry land, Jonah is ready to fulfill his mission and do what God has asked him to do. He ends up being the most efficient prophet in all of the Hebrew Bible: speaking one short sentence that inspires an entire country to change their wicked ways.

We tell this story on Yom Kippur afternoon, in part to keep ourselves awake in those languid late hours of our fasting. But this story also perfectly illustrates the arc of teshuva: making the wrong choice, facing unforeseen consequences, reflecting on our actions, and resolving to do better next time.

We may not have had the literal experience of being in the belly of a whale, as Jonah and now Michael Packard have done. But who hasn't had this experience in a figurative sense? How many of us have found ourselves in a dark place as a consequence of the choices we have made, the actions we took or didn't take, or just because life took an unexpected turn? How many of us have cried out for forgiveness, or prayed for another chance to do the right thing?

For this year's "Jonah Experience" on Yom Kippur afternoon, we are hosting a "story slam." We would like to share a few brief stories on the theme of "In the Belly of the Whale." If you are interested in sharing a personal story with our congregation about getting through a dark time, or realizing you needed to make a change in your life, please be in touch with me at rabbi@kolamielkinspark.org. I'll be happy to walk you through what this would look like and help you develop your story.

Our entire community has spent some time in the belly of the whale this year, as we responded to the COVID-19 pandemic and addressed some tough questions about the future of Kol Ami. When we gather this year to observe the High Holy Days, may we all know the joy of saying, as Jonah once said, "You brought my life up from the pit, O Eternal my God" (Jonah 2:7).

Jewish Relief Agency (JRA) is seeking volunteers to assist with packing and delivering boxes of food and critical household goods to families in need in our community. Prior to the pandemic, JRA saw an average of 1,000 energetic and enthusiastic volunteers each month, to help them in their mission of relieving hunger for over 6,400 low-income families in the region. With social distancing guidelines and capacity limits set last year, JRA re-engineered its program model for safety limiting the number of individuals in their warehouse. Now, as more and more volunteers get vaccinated and the numbers of COVID cases in the region are declining, JRA is excited and eager to welcome back volunteers for its monthly Food Distributions. Volunteers and their families can sign-up to pack boxes of food, deliver them to families in need, create artwork to include in the boxes, and much more. To see a list of upcoming volunteer opportunities, visit the JRA calendar of events at <https://jewishrelief.org/calendar>

Congregation Kol Ami celebrated as an environmental leader in the Jewish community

Congregation Kol Ami was recently awarded the Hazon Seal of Sustainability for 2020, the fourth consecutive year of our participation in the program. We are proud of our commitment to sustainability, to building a stronger, healthier community, and to renewing this process for coming years. With a network of more than 50 other U.S. sites, we will continue to promote new sustainability projects that will have a significant and long lasting impact, both environmentally and on our community life. Interested in helping our efforts? Email sustainability@kolamielkinspark.org.

Getting Dirty

Our Kol Ami crew helped out in May at Share Food Programs' Nice Roots Farm. We planted summer crops, harvested berries, weeded and watered. Nice Roots is Share's urban farm that grows seasonal produce for distribution to people in need, as well as to farmers' markets in the Allegheny West neighborhood. The proceeds from those sales support farm operations.

There are many ways you can volunteer to help at Share. Just a few hours of your time can make a huge difference to neighbors in need.

Look for more Kol Ami Social Action / Shomrei Adamah Environmental Stewardship group volunteer opportunities at Share and High School Park in the fall.
